The other choices of mowers are cheaper overall. Push mowers are the simplest mowers but they're only good for small yards. Self-propelled mowers need to be serviced regularly and from time to time they need to be repaired by professionals but they're not as advanced as riding mowers. Let's not even consider lawn tractors as they're the most expensive mowers on the market. If you have a riding mower, there are some repair jobs you can do for yourself but you'll need replacement parts. Hardware StoresBuying replacement parts from a hardware store is the quickest way of getting your riding mower back in action. Places like Lowes and Home Depot stock a wide range of parts for the most popular mowers on the market. If you have a Menards or True Value in your area, they're also worth checking out. You should be able to get some more information from the staff at these places but it's probably best to check online and go to the store knowing exactly what your mower needs. Scrap YardsWhether you need a replacement deck, new tires, wheels, steering parts, or axles, you should check out what's available at scrap yards before you look anywhere else. Most modern scrap yards maintain a computerized list of their stock so you can call to find out if they have the part you need. They aren't always willing to ship across the country but if the yard has the part you want, you might be able to negotiate a shipping price with them.WebsitesAmazon and eBay are just a couple of websites where you'll find replacement parts for your riding mower. Craigslist is another website where reasonably priced mower parts can be bought online. While eBay and Amazon have great returns policies and lots of protection for buyers, the same can't be said for Craigslist. Look for sellers with images that show the part being sold not generic pictures of the part that the seller has sourced online. Genuine sellers will also list the item for a reasonable price. If the deal looks too good to be true, it could well be a scam.RetailersMassive retailers like Walmart and Target also sell parts for mowers. You'll find replacement blades, new air and fuel filters, spark plugs and drive belts at these retailers so if you need these consumable parts, check out these retailers before going to a dedicated lawn mower shop. You'll also find affordable storage covers and other accessories at great prices. They also sell devices like blade sharpeners and accessories like deluxe seat coverings which would combine to make the job of cutting grass easier and more comfortable.ManufacturersGoing directly to the manufacturer for replacement parts often costs more but you'll get the highest level of advice on what your mower needs and the parts you buy will definitely work on your mower. In most cases, the manufacturer will give you a better warranty than you can get from any retailer. Lawnmower makers like John Deere don't manufacture all the parts that make up the mower. For example, they're not the people to go to for replacement air filters as they're often manufactured by makers like Briggs and Stratton. MORE FROM LIFE123.COM If you're a homeowner with a yard, a riding mower is imperative to help you with upkeep. Less arduous than a push mower, a lawn tractor or riding mower covers a lot of ground in little time. There are a few factors to consider as you make your choice.Different Types of Riding MowersNot all riding mowers are created equally. In fact, there are a few different types to choose from, and it depends heavily on what type of yard you're trying to maintain. Some curvy, bumpy yards will require a mower with a large turn radius while smaller, flat yards can make do with a simple mower. Some choices include:Rear engine riding mower: This is the smallest type of all the riding mowers and is the easiest to use and maintain. They take up less space and are well-equipped for smaller yards (one acre and under). However, they cannot take attachments and don't have a high turn radius. Lawn and garden tractor: Don't let the name "tractor" throw you off. Essentially, these are large riding mowers. They are tough and durable and cover a lot of ground. You can hook up attachments to them, they can cover yards well above an acre, and the turn radius is moderate. Zero turn mowers: These mowers are tough and durable like lawn tractors but are the best choice for bumpy, hilly yards or yards with many curves. Such as with a lawn tractor, they do take attachments as well. Some Features to ConsiderThere are other features to consider when looking for a tractor and mower for sale other than turning radius and power. Some other features that homeowners find important are:Cutting width: A mower with a larger cutting width can get a job done in less time but may not be ideal for smaller spaces. Top speed: A mower with speeds of up to 13 mph provides great efficiency. Price: The least inexpensive mower model, when purchased new, is slightly less than $1,000. For this reason, homeowners may look to used ride on mowers for sale for a more economical choice. Differences in TransmissionWhile differences in a riding mower's transmission may not help its efficiency, it will contribute to how easy a tractor is for you to use. The type of transmission a mower is equipped with then becomes quite important. As you're researching used mowers for sale in Ohio or other states, do pay attention to the type of transmission. You will generally find:Manual transmission: Just as with a manual transmission vehicle, you will have to shift through different speeds as you are mowing. Some mowers include a clutch, but most do not. A manual has up to six speeds. Automatic transmission: Also similarly to a car, this only has several speeds and no clutch. The speed is then controlled by how much pressure you put on the gas pedal. Hydrostatic transmission: A hydrostatic transmission makes no difference as to how you operate the vehicle, but it means that that the mower uses fluid instead of belts, which offers you a smoother ride while working. Used vs. new mowersThere is absolutely nothing wrong with looking for old mowers for sale for a more economical choice. However, just as with a car, it's a good idea to have the mower thoroughly checked over by a mechanic before purchase. Have the mechanic check the transmission, tires, belts and motor before you agree to buy.Riding Mower MaintenanceWhether you're looking for greenfield mowers for sale, other brands or a sickle mower for sale, they all require maintenance. Generally speaking, this is a once-a-year chore you take care of in early spring. Most mowers require the same amount of maintenance. Make sure you check the fuel and oil levels before every use. During the mowing season, make sure parts are lubricated and belts and fasteners are tight. Never operate the mower if the blades seem loose. At the end of the season, disconnect the battery and the spark plug wires to help save battery life when you're not mowing. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET If your lawn is a half-acre or larger, you'll probably need a riding lawn mower. Riding lawn mowers have a seat, steering wheel and various controls. Besides these basic design elements, various types of riding lawn mowers are largely defined by the front cutting deck, a covering that shelters the blade. The longer the blade, the longer the deck. It logically follows that you should select a longer deck for large lawns, since the blade will also be longer and can cut more. (The riding mower is not to be confused with gardening tractors or lawn tractors, which have decks mounted in the middle, making them less maneuverable.You can choose between gas and electric riding lawn mowers. To run an electric one, just make sure the battery is charged before you start. Electric mowers are quieter, better for the environment and cheaper to run. On the flip side, electric riding mowers are much less efficient than gas mowers, as they expend less energy. Also, the battery dies fairly quickly, especially in wet conditions.Whether a mower runs off of gas or electricity, top-of-the-line riding lawn mowers feature extras like cup holders, cruise control, sun shades and even CD players. And these advantages come with a price tag: Riding mowers can cost between $1,000 and $9,000.Because they're bigger and more robust than walk-behind mowers, riding mowers are more dangerous to operate. Common problems include the mower tipping over, people getting run over by the mower or falling off from the seat, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.Keep your riding lawn mower safe and in good condition with regular maintenance. Quality care includes changing the oil and filter, inspecting and replacing the spark plug, cleaning or replacing air filters and lubricating grease fittings. Run the engine long enough for it to warm up before use.If you live in a region that gets winter weather prohibitive to lawn mowing in the winter, you will want to do some extra cleaning before storing your mower for the cold season. It should be a place protected from nasty weather, such as your basement, garage or workshop. Winter maintenance can include removing all grass clippings from the exterior, cleaning the battery and more.Next, find out what's on the inside. Continue to learn about engines and which ones will give you the horsepower you need for exquisite lawn care.
